SKI SPEEDER

THE RESISTANCE HAS A TRACK RECORD of making ends meet with surplus New Republic warships, supplies obtained on the black market, and carefully maintained equipment from the Rebellion era. But ingenuity gives way to desperation when a First Order strike force corners the Resistance on Crait. Frantic repairs to ancient, rickety ski speeders that predate the Alliance lead to the debut of Poe Dameron's "Reb" Squadron. The fragile-looking ski speeders were originally civilian sports repulsorcraft, up-armed by long-gone rebel techs for use as patrol vehicles. These lightweight craft were never intended to take on anything bigger than the speeder bikes and ground vehicles favored by smugglers and pirates—but they now stand as the Resistance's last line of defense.

CRIMSON CALLING CARD

Ski speeders were designed for use on asteroids, where there is enough gravity for repulsors to engage, but not enough for true flight. They prove mildly terrifying to pilot in the heavier gravity of a planetary surface—the overcompensating repulsors threaten to launch the lightweight craft into the air with every bounce. The ventral mono-ski stabilizes the speeder, ensuring its powerful engine supplies thrust and not lift, and cuts a groove in Crait's bright white layer of saline crust. Crimson crystalline dust gouged out by the mono-ski is caught by the engine blast, giving each speeder a defiantly gaudy red tail.

FAMILY RESEMBLANCE

Stung up his first ski speeder, Poe Dameron complains that it's "a B-wing that can't fly." The squadron leader is closer to the truth than he knows: The ski speeder's cockpit pod, central engine, and outrigger are mainstays of Verpine ship designs, which include the T-6 shuttle, the V-19 T-6 shuttle, and the production model of the B-wing fighter. The B-wing line began with a prototype built by the Mon Calamari engineer Quarrie, who sought to improve on designs conceived by Verpine shipwrights.

RECREATIONAL VEHICLES

The early strips witnessed a fall for asteroid slalom, a sport in which competitors sped along the surface of small asteroids, using them as springboards for high-speed turns and eye-catching stunts. The Verpine manufacturer Roche Machines produced the V-4 series of ski speeders, which boasted ventral mono-skis to keep the speeders anchored, and boom-mounted heli-cannons to record maneuvers. Unfortunately, an undetected stone-mite infestation led to the derauling of several racers and their craft in the Orlon Belt Grand Slalom Finals—a tragedy watched live by a horrified galaxy. As bookings plummeted, Roche Machines canceled production and sold off its inventory at slashed prices.

UNLIKELY BUYERS

With the asteroid slalom craze over, most of Roche Machines' ski speeders were scrapped. But a few found unlikely second lives thanks to tinkers in asteroid settlements. Ski speeders were recast as exploration craft and transports, their outriggers adapted for mounting everything from scientific instruments to supply pods. Meanwhile, a rebel cell backed by Alderaanian credits adapted a number of ski speeders for use as patrol craft on Crait. The rebel techs attached laser cannons to the speeders' booms and added as much armor as the lightweight craft could accommodate.
